Legendary Photographer Edward Weston at the Bowers

SANTA ANA, CA (May 2017)—The Bowers Museum in Santa Ana, California is pleased to announce Stark Beauty: The Photography of Edward Weston. Without Weston's ability to find and present the beauty of subjects as they had never been seen before, photography would likely not be considered fine art today. The exhibition highlights some of Weston's best and most important photographs. These 72 vivid gelatin silver print photographs are presented in three sections: the first includes portraits of Weston's many muses and well-known artistic contemporaries like Diego Rivera; the second section features photos that highlight the beauty of forms from nudes, to Weston's iconic and evocative shots of peppers, to man-made objects; and the third and final section highlights landscapes that depict the United States with unaltered focus and reality, with a brief study of Weston's ever-changing 20th Century world.

The exhibition is on loan from The Capital Group Foundation, an institution dedicated to making its collection of some of the most influential 20th Century American photographers available to the public for exhibition and education. Stark Beauty is organized by and exclusive to the Bowers Museum and will be on view from July 22 through September 17, 2017.

"I want the stark beauty that a lens can so exactly render, presented without interference of 'artistic effect.'"

—Edward Weston

Edward Weston (March 24, 1886- January 1, 1958) is one of the masters of American photography. Born in Highland Park, Illinois, Weston received his first camera as a gift from his father when he was sixteen years old. This Kodak no.2 Bulls Eye was the start of Weston's lifelong appreciation of the world through the lens. It was not long before he moved to Southern California and established himself first as a roving photographer, a studio assistant, and ultimately as the owner of his own cottage studio in Tropic, the area now known as Glendale. In these early years, Weston's artistic approach drew on pictorialism, the popular style of the day which emphasized alterations to photographs at the time of development to create a more painterly appearance. Throughout his career, Weston steadily edged towards a more modernist style, with an emphasis on sharply focused photography that presented an image just as it was captured and without further alterations. This approach revolutionized photography as an artistic medium, particularly through the efforts of the legendary group of American photographers, f/64, of which Weston was a part. His influence grew ever stronger with the award of the first Guggenheim Fellowship for photography in 1937. Tragically, in 1945 doctors diagnosed Weston with Parkinson's disease. Three years later he took his final photographs at his treasured Point Lobos, California where his ashes would be scattered after his death on New Year's Day, 1958.

FILMS

Eloquent Nude the Love and Legacy of Edward Weston & Charis Wilson, directed by Ian McCluskey

Sun, August 27

She was beautiful, smart, and searching. He was an emerging genius in the world of photography. When they met, they fell instantly in love. Setting off across the West with camera and typewriter in the depths of the Great Depression, Charis Wilson and Edward Weston transformed photography, and each other. Now age 90, Charis Wilson recounts her years with Weston with great humor, candor, and some regret. Combining insight from leading scholars, rare archival images, and convincingly authentic reenactments, Eloquent Nude presents a remarkable true story of love and loss, travel and adventure, and an intimate look at the making of Modern photography.
